Dear Professor Raju,

I will be brief. I wish to apologise unconditionally for the hurt and distress I have caused you. The content of the complaints you issued against me certainly suggests this and, given the critical retrospection that I have undertaken since leaving Exeter University, some of this have genuine merit.

I have no idea what the Vice Chancellor of Exeter University communicated to you after the investigation committee concluded its findings. However nothing he may have said would have conveyed the ugliness that I feel having participated in the actions of that period. Indeed I could not have expressed such sentiments at the time for events dictated otherwise.

I do not expect you to accept this apology. It makes little difference to me whether you do or not. The important thing for me is that I have cleared my conscience.

For the record I relinquished my post at Exeter in July 2005 and now teach part time on distance learning courses at the OU and for Paul Ernest. However I do intend to continue my research on the Jesuit conduit as an amateur on my own initiative and funds.

Yours,

Dennis Almeida
